U.S. still fights for Baghdad

GHDAD, Iraq — U.S. forces battled the tattered remnants q's army for control of downtown Baghdad on Tuesday, ing a counterattack and seizing a military airport. Sad- ussein's fate was unknown after an attempt to kill him he air.

urines battled snipers as they fought deeper into the capi- om the east. They seized the Rasheed Airport and cap- enough ammunition for an estimated 3,000 troops. Omi- y, they also took a prison where they found U.S. Army uni- and chemical weapons suits possibly belonging to Amer- POWs.

U.S. aircraft, tanks and artillery pound central Baghdad Tuesday, hitting government buildings.

On the city's northern side, Army forces set a Republican Guard barracks ablaze. Warplanes flew their bombing runs unchallenged, and smoke poured out of the Ministry of Planning building in the city's center.

"We are continuing to maintain our ability to conduct operations around and in Baghdad, and remove them from regime control" said Capt. Frank Thorp, a spokesman at U.S. Central Command.

State-run Iraqi television was knocked off the air, depriving the regime of a key source of influence over a population thought increasingly eager to help the forces of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Cadets in BYU's Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps passed out thousands of yellow ribbons on campus Tuesday.

The ribbons were handed out after Devotional and throughout the day to increase awareness and show support for deployed U.S. troops.

"The whole idea behind it, the slogan, was whether you support the war or not, support the troops," said Cadet George Chapman, 24, a senior from Washington, D.C., majoring in community health education.

Cadets, spouses and friends cut, folded and pinned approximately 18,000 ribbons over the weekend, said Cadet Nicklaus Walker, 24, a senior from Brigham City, majoring in European studies.

Walker said the cadets probably spent between 75 and 100 hours preparing the ribbons.

Cadets handed out a flier with the ribbons. The flier said 60 BYU students have already been deployed.

"We want other fellow cadets to realize and understand that it's not just somebody off at Fort Hood

Mending broken hearts and homes

By LAURA CANTERA

Broken homes often lead to broken hearts for children of orce.

"When I tell people my parents are divorced, I get a shocked ," said Emily Johnson, a sophomore majoring in political nce. "And normally people get really quiet and I then have to lain the situation."

Twenty-year-old Johnson, from Chicago, recognizes the stig- associated with children of divorce, and said she thinks peo- often wonder how well she can handle relationships and ether she's a stable person.

The dominant culture's emphasis on marriage and family ds to cast a shadow on children who come from broken nes.

"If the guy is going to think so little of me, then I wouldn't at to waste my time there anyway," Johnson said.

Similarly, Jake Larsen, 23, a senior from Orem, said he used hide the fact that his parents were divorced, but he now uses dates' reaction to the news as a measuring tool.

He said he thinks people assume children of divorce "come relationships with some type of emotional baggage."

But that's not always true.

Internet fraud on the rise in Utah

U.S. total revenue loss is more than $7 million to hackers according to the Internet Fraud Statistics 2002 Report. Utah took in 1,008 complaints and lost $3 million.

Although the Internet helps people every day, with the growth of the Internet comes the growth of cyber attacks.

Every year people lose more money because of viruses and Internet fraud.

In Utah, identification and auction fraud are some of the most costly crimes.

"Last year, we took in 1,008 complaints," said Terri Powell, director of the Salt Lake City Cyber Tasks Force. "Of those complaints, they had a total loss of a little over $3 million, and that's just in our little corner of the world. It's really hard."

According to the Internet Fraud Statistics 2002 Report, between the months of January and July, the total revenue loss from Internet fraud in the United States was more than $7 million. The average loss for each person was $484.

Out of the top 10 types of Internet fraud, 87 percent of the total revenue loss was from online auctions.

"People purchase things over the Internet and never receive the goods," Powell said.

The National Fraud Information Center reported that nearly 27,000 of the 28,655 who responded to a 2002 poll said they received unsolicited e-mail offers.

British parents Raj and Shahana Hashmi kiss their son Zain as they face the media for photographs after winning a court appeal overturning a ban on their having a "designer baby."

Court affirms embryo screen to select donor siblings

LONDON (AP) — Couples can screen their test-tube embryos to ensure the baby's tissue provides a match to help cure a sick sibling, an appeals court ruled Tuesday.

This is only the latest step in a 16-month-long legal battle between Britain's fertility regulator and an anti-abortion group, which claims such screening could lead to the creation of designer babies for spare body parts.

In December 2001, Britain's Human Fertilization and Embryology Authority said couples undergoing in vitro fertilization, who already were having their embryos screened for serious hereditary diseases, could also get a license to have them tested for tissue matching to save the life of a sibling.

The anti-abortion group Comment On Reproductive Ethics went to the High Court to block the licenses, arguing that Parliament alone should decide on such issues.

At the center of the legal wrangling were Shahana and Raj Hashmi, a couple striving to conceive a fifth child as an umbilical cord blood donor for their seriously ill 4-year-old, Zain.

They had been granted the first license under the 2001 ruling.

But the High Court ruled in December 2002 that the embryology authority had no legal power to license embryo selection by "tissue typing" to help sick siblings.

That ruling put on hold the Hashmis' license and the embryology regulator appealed.

House bans diamond trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diamonds that finance and fan African civil wars would be banned from U.S. import and export under a bill passed by the House on Tuesday.

"It makes a step in the right direction to wage war on the international trade nexus of money, diamonds and weapons, which help fuel conflicts in Africa," said Gregory Meeks, D-N.Y.

The bill, passed 419-2 with one member voting present, enters the United States into an international agreement that bans trade in so-called conflict diamonds. The Senate Finance Committee approved a similar bill last week.

The international agreement, known as the Kimberley Process, includes representatives of the diamond industry, human rights groups and dozens of other nations. The group requires that traded diamonds come with certification that they were mined from legitimate sources.

Soldiers capture 20 Taliban

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan (AP) — American troops began a search for suspected Taliban fighters in a remote southern corner of Afghanistan on Tuesday, while Afghan government soldiers arrested 20 Taliban suspects in separate raids, officials said.

The U.S. soldiers were conducting house-to-house searches in Sangeen district of Helmand province, said Dad Mohammed Khan, head of the province's intelligence department.

He did not say how many U.S. troops were involved in the operation. The troops reached the area from their base in Kandahar, 60 miles to the southeast, Khan said. There was no immediate confirmation of the operation by U.S. officials at the base.

Khan said the American troops may be looking for former Taliban commanders Mullah Dadullah and Mullah Akhtar Mohammed. The two were reported in the area some time ago, according to the intelligence official.

Mullah Akhtar Mohammed and his brother, Abul Hassan, were in Sangeen district recently and distributed satellite phones and money among their supporters in several villages in the district, Khan said.

Conn. man dies in beating

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A 39-year-old retarded man who liked to dress up like Batman and tell neighbors he was a crime-fighter was beaten to death in the lobby of an apartment building where he had been placed by state officials.

Ricky Whistnant died at the scene Saturday. He fell and hit his head on a radiator after three teens pelted him with bottles of soda he had just bought, authorities who viewed a security video of the attack said. Even after Whistnant collapsed, police said, the boys continued kicking and pouring soda on him.

The attackers fled after tenants called 911, but several hours later police arrested two 14-year-old boys and one 13-year-old.

Neighbors said they had wondered for months why social workers would have placed a mentally retarded man alone in the city's most crime-ridden neighborhood. "I don't know why he was here," said Hugo Nunez, who lives across the hall. "This could have been avoided."

Plane crashes near Toledo

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — A twin-engine jet crashed in flames Tuesday as it approached the Toledo airport, killing all three people on board, a sheriff said.

The Falcon 20 turbo jet left from Traverse City, Mich. It was owned by Grand Aire, a charter company based in suburban Toledo, said Lucas County Sheriff James Telb.

The victims were company employees, Telb said. Officials have not released their identities and Grand Aire declined to comment.

The plane went down about 2 p.m., a mile southwest of the airport in a nature preserve. The flames were extinguished about two hours later.

Air traffic controllers alerted authorities when the plane dropped off radar, Telb said. Sheriff's deputies and park rangers discovered the wreckage in a remote area thick with brush and leaves after following a horse trail toward smoke.

"It was really difficult to reach it and even find it," said Mike George, fire chief for the Ohio National Guard unit based at the airport.

The wreckage lay in a heap surrounded by yellow police tape, still smoldering hours after the crash.

Morrell said, adding that ...metimes harder for chil... ...f divorce to know what a healthy marriage is like but they can learn by getting close to married couples, such as siblings or other relatives.

Students should also realize their parent's divorce is not their fault and is not a personal failure, she said.

Marriage and family expert and religion professor Douglas Brinley, said divorce is a factor in successful relationships, but shouldn't be an overriding consideration.

"I think it's a red flag, but that doesn't mean you can't take it down," he said.

When Jen Berger, a junior from Logan, first breaks the news that her parents are divorced, she said most people expect her to have a sob story about her life. She said people are surprised she's not different — a little more rebellious.

Surprisingly, students with divorced parents claim they know more about marriage and dating than people might expect.

Larsen, a Spanish and French major, said he is more "realistic." He said he won't run away the first time a problem arises because he understands that problems in marriage are normal.

Berger, 20, an elementary education major, said she realizes marriage isn't a "fairy tale," and goes into relationships with "eyes wide open."

"People believe in love at first sight. I don't believe in that at all," she said.

Beckstrom is conservative in matters of love too.

"I'm not as quick to give my heart away," said Beckstrom, a senior from Santa Monica, Calif. " I know how much it hurts when it fails and how much work it takes to make a marriage successful."

The increased commitment and caution Johnson has toward dating is a result of not wanting to go through what she saw her parents go through.

This is the most common and heartfelt sentiment among students of divorce. They don't want to expose their children to the kind of pain they experienced and are motivated to work even harder. As a result, Berger vows, "there's no backing out."

This practical attitude leads most children of divorce to decry the all-too-common quick courtships so prevalent in Provo.

"You've been hurt and saw the pain and struggles," Beckstrom said. "The best marriages come between best friends. Quick marriages are dangerous. You're going to spend eternity with this person."

Larsen said he feels less hurried in courtship because he's seen that it is easier to get married than to actually stay married.

Whether it's been a month or 10 years since the divorce, the challenges never end.

Morrell said the real trouble with divorce begins when people think the issues in their family get in the way of their own relationships, but said books, classes and counseling can help overcome barriers.

She said students should realize they're not alone in their family problems, develop healthy friendships with all types of people as a means of increasing their relationship skills and work through relationship fears as they arise.

Wolfinger said on average, people with divorced parents don't complete as much education as those with married parents. They're more likely to get pregnant out of wedlock, have smoking problems and even die sooner.

But some students with divorce in their past are determined it not be a part of the future.

"I'm trying to make myself a complete person — the kind of person I want to marry," Beckstrom said. "Rather than looking for the one, I become the one."

that's going to war. It's fellow BYU students that are taking up arms and having to go over there," Walker said.

Even before the war began, the idea to show support for U.S. troops originated in a meeting after anti-war and pro-war protests took place on campus, Chapman said.

The Air Force ROTC wrote a proposal that went through BYUSA's Student Advisory Council to obtain funding for the idea.

Originally, council representatives expressed concern about the proposal.

"Some of the representatives were worried that there was going to be some kind of an implication that BYU is in full support of the war," said Luis Lugo, executive director on the Student Advisory Council. "We didn't want to convey against it or for it."

Those on the council wanted the yellow ribbons to emphasize BYU's support for the troops, Lugo said.

"When it was going through the Student Advisory Council, there were a lot of people who were really concerned that it would be making a political statement," Chapman said.

After discussion and debate, the resolution, which originated in March, was given approval two weeks ago.

"By wearing a yellow ribbon, one is not necessarily taking a political stand, just a stand of support for the individuals who were sent over to Iraq," said Jordana Choucair, vice president and chair of the Student Advisory Council. "The yellow ribbons help unite those on campus who have loved ones in the Middle East and wish to support the troops."

The ribbons received much acceptance as many students wore them on shirts, jackets and book bags throughout the day.

Bush: Iraqis will rule Baghdad

Associated Press

HILLSBOROUGH, Northern Ireland — Saddam Hussein is losing his grip on power "finger by finger," President Bush said Tuesday as he sought with British Prime Minister Tony Blair to ease concerns that their conquering alliance will dominate postwar life in oil-rich Iraq.

"I hear a lot of talk about how we're going to impose this leader or that leader. Forget it," Bush said at a news conference with Blair outside Belfast. "Iraqis are plenty capable of running Iraq and that is precisely what is going to happen."

Blair said the U.S.-British role was merely to help in the transition from years of dictatorship to self-rule.

"This new Iraq that will emerge is not to be run either by us or, indeed, by the U.N. That is a false choice," Blair said. "It will run by the Iraqi people."

Addressing reporters in the gilded throne room of an 18th century castle, Bush and Blair offered personal assessments of the war — all positive.

The two leaders also said they would cede power in the country as soon as possible, involve Iraqi citizens from the outset in the creation of a transitional government and give a "vital role" to the United Nations in reconstruction.

But the leaders — meeting for the third time in three weeks — offered few details about the exact U.N. role or the makeup of the interim governing authority. Bush said his word should be good enough.

"There's some skepticism here in Europe about whether or not I mean what I say. Saddam Hussein clearly now knows I mean what I say," Bush said.

Questions about the U.N.'s role persisted. "I don't think we have a clearer sense of what that role might be," said Fred Eckhard, spokesman for Secretary-General Kofi Annan.

Arab nations propose U.N. meeting on Iraqi war

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Arab nations on Tuesday requested a U.N. General Assembly meeting on the war in Iraq, hoping to win approval for a resolution calling for a cease-fire.

The assembly's General Committee will meet Friday to consider the request, spokesman Richard Sydenham said.

At least 15 of the committee's 28 members must approve the meeting and then, the full 191-member General Assembly must vote to add it to the assembly's agenda.

Yemen's U.N. Ambassador Abdullah Alsaidi, the Arab Group's chairman who made the request, said the group will seek a "very mild" resolution.

"It will ask for a cease-fire, respect for Iraqi sovereignty, territorial integrity," he said. "It will ask for the unity of Iraq."

U.S. Ambassador John Negroponte said last Wednesday that Washington does not think it is "either necessary or desirable" to raise Iraq in the General Assembly, because the issue was discussed March 26-27 in the Security Council.

But Yemen's Alsaidi said Monday that Arab nations want a General Assembly meeting, because "they discovered there was no possibility of a resolution" in the Security Council, where the United States and its ally Britain have veto power.

Iraq's U.N. Ambassador Mohammed Al-Douri said the Arab Group knows that nearly 50 countries in the U.S.-led coalition supporting the war will try to prevent a General Assembly resolution on Iraq.

But he said Iraq was facing "the destruction of a whole country and the killing of several thousand people."

Reece's brother, Bryce, has participating, too. He volun- s as a buddy every year.

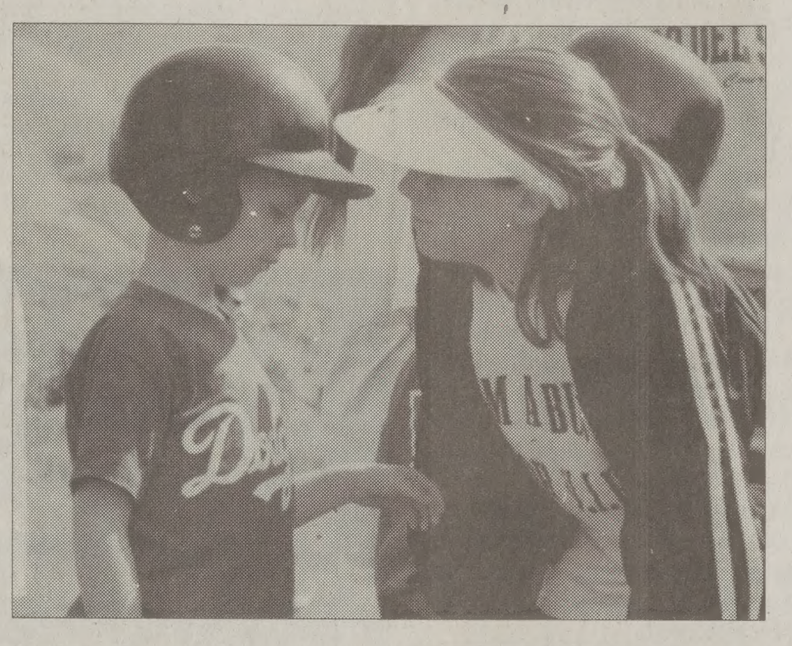
I think it's cool because the dies try to help them do bet- and give them a challenge to the sport," Bryce, 12, said.

Nonetheless, the players don't ays receive the buddies with n arms.

When Bryce first started as a unteer, he said his buddy ld bite and kick him until y got to know each other bet-

"He didn't know how to talk, he would hit people to get ir attention," he said.

"We're all different," Hunter d. "We all have challenges. y just wear their challenges on their sleeve."



For Mary Erekson, it's a big deal to see her 9-year-old autistic son, Patrick, playing the game.

"It's indescribable. The disability seems to just melt away," she said.

Patrick doesn't speak much, his mother said, but he knows when Saturday comes around and it's T-ball season.

"He'll watch the clock and get all excited," Erekson said. "'We can go to baseball now,' Patrick will always say."

Patrick didn't like his buddies at first either, his mother said. He would become irritated with them and push them away.

"But now, the buddies are his friends," Erekson said.

These children don't always have friends their age, she said. Through activities like the T-ball, the children can interact with other children their age that have similar interests.

The children on the teams are between the ages of 6 and 18.

"If I do have other kids that are older than 18, we don't turn them away," Hunter said. "We find a place to include them."

Last season, a 20-year-old boy wanted to be involved, so he was made an honorary assistant coach for one of the teams.

In sports like soccer and basketball the children do not understand why the ball is taken away from them, Hunter explained. With T-ball, they can be part of a team but still play individually.

"It's really good for these kids," she said. "They have their own sport and can feel like part of the community."

Orem speed limits may increase

City to consider raising limits to meet guidelines

By LISA MILLETT

Orem City officials are proposing to raise speed limits five to 10 mph on the most traveled streets and will present recommended speeds to residents during an open house at the end of the month.

"We aren't really proposing to raise the speeds through the city. We're just proposing to raise the speed limits," said Chris Tschirki, Orem transportation engineer. "In other words, people are already driving well over the posted speed limits throughout the city, and we want to make the posted speed limit the actual enforceable speed limit."

The open house will not be an official presentation but more of an open forum where citizens can look at information, displays, make comments and take a survey, Tschirki said.

Orem's Engineering Division will present research findings and recommendations during the open house to raise the speed limits on busy and crowded roads.

The open house will be April 24, 6-8 p.m. at the Orem Senior Friendship Center located at 93 N. 400 East.

The Orem City Council still needs to approve the speed limit changes, which will possibly be presented to them a few weeks after the open house, Tschirki said.

"We want to get information out and let people know what we are proposing, why we are proposing it, what we are trying to accomplish and why we are doing it," Tschirki said.

Raising the speed limit for safety

City engineers say raising the speed limit will make streets safer because:

•Statistics show that streets with posted speed limits equal to the 85 percentile of drivers speed have fewer accidents.

•Increasing the speed limit could make limits easier to enforce

The Orem Transportation Committee's results showed that 85 percent of Orem drivers travel at or below the national level that reasonable drivers consider when selecting their speed of travel, Tschirki said.

According to the Orem City Web site, more vehicles travel at or near the same speed, and fewer vehicles travel at higher or lower speeds. Statistics have shown over time that the streets with

New dollar theater hits Orem

By JULENE THOMPSON

Students practically wake up before the sun to get discount movie tickets at The Movies 8 in Provo.

So, with such an eager market, longtime theater owner Don Clifton jumped in with another discount theater that opened Friday.

"The student population is excellent for a discount theater," Clifton said. "The other theater is doing well, so I thought some competition would be good."

With four screens, more than 1,000 plush seats, dollar student admission and Dolby Stereo sound, the University Mall Cinemas, in the mall's northeast parking lot, is ready for crowds.

Clifton, who lives in Spokane, Wash., has 17 years of experience operating discount theaters in Washington, California, New York and Virginia.

And, to Movies 8, around since 1988, the competition is welcome.

"It's good for everybody all the way around," said Terrell Falk, vice president of marketing and communications for Cinemark, of which Movies 8 is an affiliate.

•4 theaters
•1,000 seats
•$1 admission for students

Cinemark has discount and first-run theaters all over the valley and the country but the new University Mall Cinemas is privately owned and so can offer special events.

Clifton said he plans to show old movies and kid's movies over the summer.

Lloyd Alburo, 24, a senior studying marketing advertising, from Bergenfield, N.J., said he is glad to see another cheap theater.

"As students, we read a lot of stuff during the week," Alburo said. "You can just absorb movies without having to use your brain."

Keith McLeman, 23, a sophomore from The Outer Hebrides, Scotland, majoring in sociology, said Provo needs another discount theater especially for weekends.

"I have to go at 1 in the afternoon to get tickets for 10 at night," he complained.

According to Clifton, there are more people who go to the theater on a regular basis in Utah than in other areas like Seattle and New York.

So much movie watching among students could have something to do with having a dollar theater close by.

McLeman said he definitely goes to more movies in Provo than he did in Scotland where movies cost about $10.

"When I saw the price here I was like, 'get out of here, that's brilliant,'" he said. "You can't buy a pack of chewing gum for that price.

"Students aren't very well off in Scotland so I think more students would go if there were dollar movies."

Price also matters to students in Provo.

"We're all poor students, and we need some form of cheap entertainment," said Kate Zeuschner, 20, a junior from Columbus, Ohio.

Wayne Brown, psychiatrist at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center, said he likes to know he can walk out of a movie if he wants to and not feel like he wasted a lot of money.

Also, as the most stone cold sober student body in the United States, BYU students have more time on weekends for cheap entertainment.

"Most LDS people don't hang out at bars and lounges so theaters would be a place where they go," Clifton said.

Many students said they like that they don't have to plan too much for a movie.

Red Cross class to help youth understand terrorism

By MASON CURRAN

The American Red Cross is now sponsoring a new curriculum designed to help elementary, middle school and high school students deal with fear about the war, natural disasters and other tragic events.

The new curriculum, titled "Facing Fear: Helping Young People Deal with Terrorism and Tragic Events," is tailored for each age group and meets national education standards in health, social studies and language arts, according to a news release. Lessons can either be downloaded from the Red Cross Web site or picked up as a hard copy from local chapters.

"Currently, there are 1,500 people per week who are downloading the curriculum," said Ray Steen, spokesman for the Red Cross.

The new curriculum can also benefit adults.

"It helps parents, adults and teachers, so they aren't adversely affected by their own children's reaction to different events," Steen said.

The program was designed to be able to cover not only terrorist events, but also natural disasters.

"The curriculum is relev no matter what the situa is," Steen said. "Teachers tailor the material to the sp ic needs of their area."

The program breaks d the students in the follow groups according to their gr in school: K-2, 3-5, 6-8 and 9

Lesson titles range fi facts about the events to t ings students might encour during an ordeal.

The Red Cross plans to h the schools implement material into their normal c riculum, said Randy Fra director of Emergency S vices for the Mountain Val chapter of the Red Cross Provo.

"The program helps kids to understand what g in the world with war and t rorism," Frank said. "It he them also prepare for a dis ter."

Frank said the new progr will benefit the students.

"If I'm gone in anot state, I'd want my family know how to deal with a dis ter if one hit," he said.

Different components of curriculum include less plans for teachers and a activity sheets that can reproduced for students complete.

In all cases, the mentor may act to teach, to train and to demonstrate gospel principles by example," Hooper said.

Kerrie Grigg, 21, a junior from Idaho Falls, Idaho, majoring in elementary education, said the Devotional was a great reminder of the opportunities provided at BYU.

"It is such a blessing to be at this school so we can have spiritual growth incorporated into our secular education," Grigg said.

Hooper used an example of how students influenced their peers to serve missions.

By the time students graduate from BYU, 95 percent of the males and 30 percent of females have served missions, he said.

"While many have planned their missions long before they attend BYU, a significant number make the final decision to serve while they are here because of the influence of their peers," Hooper said.

The relationship between a professor and student is not a one-way street, Hooper said.

"Both sides must be actively engaged to gain full benefit from the association," he said.

Natalia Peterson, 21, a junior from Bluffdale, Salt Lake County, majoring in early elementary education, said she is grateful for the chance to work with her professors at BYU.

"I appreciate the mentoring program and how it gives everybody the possibility to be a part of something great to enhance our knowledge in all areas," Peterson said.

Hooper said BYU is a school that shares a love for the gospel and is concerned for each other.

"We influence others as examples of gospel living, as mentors and recipients of mentoring," Hooper said.

Y book buyback softens blow to students

By SARAH BILLS

Most students complain about the dent buying textbooks leaves in their budget, but the BYU Bookstore's buyback program offers students one of the best buyback deals in the nation.

The BYU Bookstore buys back books the university will need again for 60 percent of the current new price, giving BYU students 10 percent more than other Utah schools, including the University of Utah and Utah Valley State College, which offer their students the average national buyback rate of 50 percent.

BYU doesn't know of any other school besides BYU-Idaho that offers students a 60 percent buyback rate, said Dee Hansen, manager of textbook sales for the bookstore.

The bookstore sells used books for 75 percent of the new price. So, if a student buys a used book and is able to sell it back at the end of the semester, she can use the book all semester for only 15 percent of the book's new price.

BYU can afford to offer students one of the lowest textbook costs in the nation for a few reasons.

First, the university doesn't expect to get a lot of money from the bookstore, said Brent Laker, associate director of the bookstore.

The BYU Bookstore buys back textbooks at 60 percent of the current new price. BYU offers the third to fourth largest buyback in the country.

Second, most bookstore profits go to covering store expenses like salaries, rent, shipping and running electronic equipment because the university requires the bookstore to sustain itself.

The bookstore does not use tithing or any other university budgeted or appropriated funds to operate, Hansen said.

Third, BYU's large size allows it to run an efficient operation. The bookstore manages the third to the fourth largest buyback operation in the nation, (varying from year to year). It competes closely with the University of Washington, Michigan State and the University of California at Los Angeles.

Although the bookstore doesn't maximize its profits, the university does expect the store to run an ethical business based on good business principles. Money left over after covering bookstore expenses goes into a university fund to be used where needed, he said.

Bookstore revenues built up over a 20-year period funded much of the Wilkinson Student Center renovation a few years ago.

BYU sells new textbooks with a 23 percent margin, meaning they charge students 23 percent more than they paid for the books. The national average margin is 25 percent.

The bookstore has more control over buyback than margins, so they work to minimize textbook prices by increasing buyback's efficiency.

"We want to do everything we can to help students," Laker said. "We really try hard to put everything on the buyback list."

But BYU can't buy back every book, and it can't buy all books for 60 percent of the current new price. For the bookstore to buy a book back, faculty or departments must submit a request form for a future term prior to buy back, the book must be the correct edition and must be in good condition, and the bookstore can't have the book overstocked already.

To maximize the number of books bought back, the store invites a national wholesale company to buy books the store can't buy during buyback week.

Wholesale companies buy used books for 10 to 30 percent of new retail value, depending on the national demand. Bookstore and wholesale buyback transactions occur at the same time.

Employees from the wholesale company make up half of the employees working in the buyback lines during finals week. Employees place the books in separate piles on either side of the cash register, depending on whether the bookstore or the wholesale company buys the books.

The bookstore sells used books to two to three wholesale companies; they also buy other used books from four to five companies, so they can offer students books at a lower price.

Full-length movie found illegally stored on BYU computer

By TASHA SOTOMAYOR

A computer within the College of Fine Arts and Communication was recently found to have an inappropriate, full-length movie stored on it.

Don Powell, manager of information systems for the College of Fine Arts and Communications, received an e-mail from the BYU Copyright Licensing Office, which received an e-mail from the Worldwide Anti-Piracy Operations, Universal Studios Inc., alerting him of the problem.

The movie had been downloaded from a peer-to-peer network sharing system.

The download was apparently accidental, he said. Powell said his job was to make sure the movie was cleared off the computer. He said he went to the computer and the users, and made sure everything was taken care of.

According to the Office of Information and Technology Web site, BYU no longer limits the time of day people can use file-sharing applications, but the university does limit how much network bandwidth these applications can tie up. Peer-to-peer software traffic includes programs that enable people to share media files with others over the Internet.

The Office of IT offers a service that provides a safer environment when browsing the Internet from the campus intranet. The Web filtering proxy prevents access to inappropriate Web sites. Access to the Internet from computer labs, public jacks and residence halls automatically goes through the filtering proxy. The Web filtering proxy is available to campus departments and individuals.

...Tuitupou is referring to the ...ntoring Environment Grant ...l Office of Research and Cre... ...ve Activities grants — which she described as "exceptional opportunities" — available to students and mentors at BYU who need funding for their studies.

Ideally, Tuitupou said faculty members would visit each student during the student's freshman year.

"We usually wait until their junior or senior year," Tuitupou said. "Then all of a sudden, we're trying to help them. I'd want faculty working with freshman, helping direct them toward possible research projects that they want to do."

David Bowie, an assistant professor in the Department of Linguistics, has been mentoring students for the past two years.

"It's a win-win situation," Bowie said. "Having students work with me increases my efficiency. I can have students work on the exploratory phases of projects, like checking for feasibility.

"For the students, it helps professionally. If they can show some sort of verifiable research experience, they will be much more desirable to graduate schools and fields in the real world."

Bowie became interested in mentoring projects after hearing another professor speak about the subject two years ago. He said he has tried to involve students in mentoring since then.

"I try to include students in my research, not just as background grunt workers but as people really producing something," Bowie said.

Pedestrians use caution, flags to safely cross

By BURKE JENSEN

While driving at night recently, Cody Heslington saw a car nearly miss a pedestrian who was crossing the road, he said.

"I was headed the other direction when I heard a car screeching its wheels," said Heslington, 22, a sophomore from Orem, majoring in business.

"The car just missed the girl, but she wasn't using one of those new flags specifically made for crossing the busy road," Heslington said.

For other students, the florescent flags placed last December on University Avenue and 900 East, and the safety improvements to 800 North have proven their worth.

"I hate crossing the road (on University Avenue)," said Tiffany Ficklin, 18, a freshman from with an open major.

"I think it's the scariest thing in the world, but I feel safer now that it has flags," Ficklin said.

Katie Sorensen, 19, a freshman from Orem, majoring in English, said having the flags at the side of the road makes drivers more aware of potential pedestrians even if no one is crossing at that moment.

Mary Blase agreed with Sorensen.

"I feel safer because before many drivers got mad at people crossing the road there," said Blase, 23, a sophomore from Dallas, majoring in sports medicine. "They didn't realize it was a crosswalk because it wasn't at a light or stop sign. Now drivers realize that it is an actual crosswalk."

Another area of safety concern for students is 800 North.

"I think it's really easy to hit people there," Heslington said. "Everyone races down that road and are in a hurry to park their car and get to class."

Last summer, the city financed the repaving of 800 North, as well as the painting of bicycle lanes and crosswalks.

Casey Serr, Provo City traffic engineer, said these changes were designed to improve the safety of the road.

"The bicycle lanes limit the amount of the road that cars have to drive on," he said. "This gives pedestrians more of a chance to see an oncoming car."

> "If there is any problem that I've observed, it's pedestrians that are too impatient waiting for a break in the traffic to cross."
> Casey Serr
> Provo City traffic engineer

Historically, 800 North has been a high-pedestrian area because students walk that way coming home from campus.

"Pedestrians are the best deterrent to drivers," Serr said.

"People who drive that route have learned to expect students at the crosswalks. If there is any problem that I've observed, it's pedestrians that are too impatient waiting for a break in the traffic to cross," Serr said.

The city isn't planning on placing any of the florescent flags along 800 North, Serr said.

"Too much of any one thing causes people to pay less attention to it," he said.

"From a traffic engineering standpoint, if you want a sign to mean something, then you'll be very stingy with how you use it," he said.

By placing flags at every intersection on the street, the flags would lose their effect on drivers, he said.

It would put the pedestrians at a greater danger rather than relying on their own judgment, Serr said.

What is a Residual? It's an additional monthly commission paid to you for each of your customers that maintain an active account. That's right, you get paid your commission for making the sale, plus I-satellite pays you monthly for your active accounts, without making another sale!

The summer may come to an end, but your residual income doesn't have to! Return to school, get married, graduate, or start another job, while you continue to receive residuals on your active accounts for the rest of the year. No other business offers this plan! This means that a first year rep could receive $750 or more, per month—passive income, even after his summer selling season is done. How? Attend the next information meeting to find out more. What do you have to lose—besides $750, in residuals, a month.

Sell something people want... digital satellite television!

Easier than Security Systems with 36-Month contracts, 620+ Credit Scores, and Convincing people to spend $30-$40+ on an over-priced door chime. A former security rep sold 35 security systems all last summer; his first week he sold 35 satellite systems working for I-Satellite! Just think of the residuals.

Better than being a "Bug Boy" and talking to people about the life cycle of a cockroach while selling pesticide.

Food storage basics improve preparation

By LARA UPDIKE

With all the talk of preparation at General Conference, some church members want to start a food storage.

But building a supply isn't just a matter of having a few bucks and some extra cupboard space. One needs to know a few things. Otherwise there will be weevils in the oatmeal and moths in the ground wheat.

Some people store canned green beans, bottled fruit and Campbell soup, but church leaders recommend storing the staples first, if possible a whole year's worth. The idea is first prepare to survive, then prepare to live comfortably; after one's storage has enough staples to keep the family alive for a year, it's time to consider storing the nice-to-have things such as applesauce and hot cocoa.

So what are the staples? Water is certainly on the list. If the local water supply were contaminated during an emergency, such as a flood or earthquake, having clean water would be more important than having food. People can live several weeks without food, but only a few days without water.

Though it's usually impractical for families to store a whole year's supply of water, they should put aside about 14 gallons of water per person – enough for two weeks.

Tap water, if it comes from a pre-treated municipal water supply, can be stored indefinitely without going bad. Water from a pond or well, however, must be treated before it's stored by adding unscented household bleach (5 percent sodium hypochlorite) – one-half teaspoon per gallon if the water is clear but not chlorinated, and one teaspoon per gallon if the water is cloudy.

The next thing to consider in storing water is the container. The best containers are juice and soda bottles made of PETE plastic, and food-grade heavy plastic buckets or drums. Milk jugs are not recommended because they are more porous. They break down more quickly and are harder to clean.

The water in a water heater is potable so long as the inlet valve is closed immediately after the community water supply is disrupted. Waterbeds and bleach bottles are good for storing water for washing, but not for drinking.

As for food, www.providentliving.org, a church Web site, lists six basics for a one-year supply and the amount needed per adult: grains (400 pounds), legumes (60 pounds), powdered milk (16 pounds), sugar or honey (60 pounds), cooking oil (10 quarts) and salt (eight pounds).

To keep these items usable, one must use an appropriate container, such as foil pouches, #10 cans, glass jars or plastic buckets. Sometimes the original container will work. No matter the type of container, it must be kept dry and cool.

Once the food is in a safe container, and the container is in a safe place, the work is still not done. With a large supply, an inventory needs to be kept and the supply rotated.

Each food item has a different shelf life, anywhere from one to 20 years.

The church Web site mentioned above lists the shelf life of many popular food storage items. The site also explains almost every other thing one might want to know about the somewhat involved task of storing food, such as how to buy food for a low price and how to cook lentils.

U.S. statistics show increase in Internet fraud

National Consumers League, said to guard personal information and warns the public to be cautious about unsolicited e-mails because they could be scams.

Viruses, another form of cyber attacks, can cause computer dysfunction and are sometimes designed to delete system information.

"There have been a lot more people calling about viruses," said Shawn Halladay, store manager of Burgoyne Computers in Provo. "It has risen in the past few years due to the Internet becoming more and more popular."

But Internet attacks do not go unpunished if the source can be found.

Orem resident Jonathan Shaw is being charged with a second-degree felony for computer crime and disorderly conduct because he allegedly planted a "Trojan" virus in his former employer's computer system.

The company had an estimated loss of $40,000 because of the planted virus.

"A 'Trojan' virus looks as if it is a friendly-looking program, but instead, it's really stealing information from your computer system," said Jay Silberstein, a computer consultant of New Tampa Computers in Tampa Bay, Fla.

"It can steal passwords, credit card numbers, any important information that you don't want people to have."

Silberstein also explained that once people download the "Trojan" virus and then get offline, the culprit has access to personal information and can steal money from credit cards or bank accounts.

"You think the 'Trojan' virus is a trustworthy program, but it's really the enemy," he said.

Fraud experts said people should be careful of what personal information they give over the Internet and should be wary of downloading programs from e-mails sent to them.

"Don't accept anything from anyone unless it's a trusted individual and even then, even if you trust them, they could have downloaded something that has a virus in it," Silberstein said.

Students log on to parties

By KYLE MONSON

Complaining about the Provo party scene has always been en vogue for BYU students.

However, one day, Brett Crockett decided he'd heard enough.

Crockett, a 22-year-old communications major from Bountiful, came up with a solution – a magic elixir of fun for bored BYU students. He named it provoparties.com and launched it during the first week of March.

The Web site provides students with access to party and concert information about both big-name acts coming to town and local bands playing at this or that club in Provo.

Crockett said the most hits he's had in a single day is 57, but hopes to expand that number through aggressive local flier campaigns.

"It's doing pretty well for the amount of advertising we've done so far," he said.

Crockett and his friends scour the Internet for concert dates and tour announcements, collect fliers for local parties, and check the announcement board in the Wilkinson Center for information on upcoming events.

"It's still in the early stages, but it's growing," he said.

Provoparties.com has a fine-tuned collection of links that are of interest to students. Everything from homestarrunner.com to the BYU Newsnet Web site to local ski resort sites have a place on Crockett's links bar.

The site also has connections to movie sites where local listings are posted, and to ticket outlets for concerts in Salt Lake City.

For the terminally bored, Crockett has included a list of suggestions: "Practice your penmanship" and "play four square" are among them, as well as several fun-filled activities involving leeches and "the Mighty Provo River."

Though he spends two to three hours a week maintaining the site, Crockett said he has no interest in making money off it.

"We do have a couple of advertisers, but we're not trying to make any money at it," he said. "I just got sick of people complaining that there's nothing to do in Provo. With that many students, there's got to be some fun stuff to do."

For local bands, the new site is extremely valuable, said Chris Vermillion, 23, a senior from Bangkok, Thailand, majoring in international studies.

Vermillion sings and plays guitar with a Provo band, and said he has been frustrated looking for parties in Provo and trying to get word out about his own parties.

"I think the site will provide a way for people looking for a party to find it," he said. "It will also give bands a means of advertising."

For Crocker, however, the site means bigger parties, and not having to listen to complaining students anymore.

University Band: Free performanc...

By BERNICE MADSEN

To demonstrate President Bateman's decree that learning at BYU is "education for eternity," the University Band programmed pieces dealing with the celestial kingdom and outer-darkness.

The 152-member band performs with the Brass and Trombone Choirs at 7:30 tonight in the de Jong Concert Hall.

Fred McInnis, director for the University Band, said the two selections the band will perform goes along with what members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints believe.

"One is an old spiritual that is very poignant in the belief of a hereafter," McInnis said. "The other is a musical rendition of 'Inferno,' which typifies pain and anguish and suffering."

McInnis said during rehearsals, he and the students were able to discuss the gospel.

"It is very significant to be able to stop and talk about what our real beliefs are," McInnis said. "This really is education for eternity."

Sarah Madsen, a senior from Hyde Park, majoring in secondary music education, said the University Band gives her an opportunity to try new instruments. She said because the band is not an audition-based group, students can learn to play an instrument that is not their forte.

"It is by far the best way to learn a new instrument," Madsen said. "You are around people who know what they are doing, and you have an ensemble experience regardless of how good you are."

McInnis said because of the broad spectrum of experience and talent in the band, his job as a director is challenging.

"I have no idea of the ability of the group," McInnis said. "We have to read through a wide range of music and decipher where we are as a group."

McInnis said he hopes the students will come away from the band with a broader understanding as to who they are as musicians.

"I hope that they have bettered themselves and really stretched from where they were at the beginning of the semester," McInnis said. "I hope they walk away with something they didn't start with."

Secrets of getting a book published

By ELIZABETH CARLSTON

Some people may think the LDS book market is saturated and there is no room for new ideas or manuscripts. Other aspiring LDS authors want to be the next Gerald Lund, finding success in Mormon fiction series. In a lecture last Thursday, two Deseret Book editors told authors how to get their writing published.

Director of Publishing Cory Maxwell said Deseret Book has three major points of criteria for manuscripts.

"We are looking for all the well written, best selling kinds of books," Maxwell said.

Books should have artistic merit, meaning it is well written, researched, thorough and has a freshness or originality. Maxwell said it should be inspiring in nature and reflect the values of the church. Most importantly, a manuscript must be marketable, unique, as it stands apart to appeal to a large segment of the audience.

In general, Deseret Book is not interested in poetry, family histories, or personal stories. However, if there is a compelling reason the manuscript should be considered, they are always interested in good books that will be successful for both author and publisher.

Maxwell emphasized the importance of writing well and being persistent in the process of submitting a manuscript.

"Publishers don't usually do this," Colleen Whitley, director of the BYU publishing lab said.

They are bypassing many of the filters a publisher uses to screen manuscripts, she said.

Maxwell said there are three levels of approval a manuscript must pass.

The publishing department handles acquisitions and is comprised of editors who consider the value of the manuscript. The publishing counsel group consists of members from Deseret Book's marketing, retail, and wholesale divisions. Sheri Dew, president and CEO of Deseret Book, also sits in on these meetings to determine how feasible the book would be financially. Finally, the manuscript must be given board approval.

Recently, Deseret Book has been scrutinized for new policies regarding what titles are placed on their shelves. Maxwell said they appreciate books distinguishing between right and wrong, but don't support books that are vulgar, sexually provocative or glamorize wrongful acts.

He mentioned Bruce C. Hafen's novel on Elder Neil A. Maxwell. The book has been widely successful for Deseret Book, but one couldn't find it on the shelves of a Border's store in New York. Maxwell said it isn't because Border's bans it, but because the book doesn't fit their agenda.

"Some have felt this is censorship, but it isn't," he said.

Maxwell said Deseret Book exists to build and inspire individuals as well as families and communities.

"Success is less a function of the popularity of a book than the source of the book," Maxwell said. "An important element of loyalty exists so the reader can expect good quality from a particular author."

Deseret Book Manager of Editing Jack Lyons told aspiring authors to be familiar with the titles available in the bookstores and make their manuscripts stand out with good writing.

"A lot of the manuscripts that come in are brown cows, but every now and then there is a purple cow," Lyons said. "Think about what I can do to create a purple cow. Write the best thing you are capable of writing."

In 1999, Deseret Book combined with Bookcraft, creating four different imprints. As of the past few months, Deseret Book decided to reduce to two imprints, creating Deseret Book and Shadow Mountain. The imprints will appeal to the Latter-day Saint market as well as a wider audience.

peration: Yellow Ribbon supports troops

rl Baily to kick off festivities at noon, entertainment provided

By BONNI FERGUSON

The Utah Coalition plans to throw one of the state's biggest pro-troop rallies to show support for U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

The Big T, Thurl Bailey volunteers for Operation: Yellow Ribbon will kick off at the Utah State Capitol Complex on Saturday at noon and will end at 4 p.m.

Festivities should include musical entertainment, speeches and the main event, the forming of a human yellow ribbon, an iconic symbol of support for troops. At 3 p.m., photographers will take an aerial shot of yellow clothing, rally participants holding hands to form the 1,000-foot-wide human yellow ribbon.

Thurl Baily

Thurl Bailey, motivational speaker and former Utah Jazz player, Thurl Bailey volunteered to serve as the event's Emcee, and will also be the entertainer. Other entertainers will join him in supporting U.S. troops in Iraq.

The guest of honor, George Wallen, a recipient of the Congressional Medal of Honor for his efforts in World War II, will also speak to pro-troop participants.

One of the project's coordinators, Darin C. Farr, said he was a veteran of the first Gulf War. His brother is in Iraq now.

Farr said he and others organized the event because they were concerned about the negative messages celebrities and press gave troops.

"We decided we were going to hold a rally to show support for the troops, not so much for the war or the Bush administration," Farr said.

Some BYU students said they want to attend the rally on Saturday.

"If I can go, I'm definitely gonna make it because I'll be supporting those troops," said Stacey Carson, 21, a pre-communications major from Edmond, Okla. "Now that the war has started, there's nothing we can do to stop it, so the best thing we can do is support it,"

Farr said that is the purpose of the rally, to send a powerful message to U.S. men and women overseas.

"Whether you agree or disagree with [the war], the troops need our support right now," Farr said. "These are the people who are going in harm's way for us on the belief that they're there to protect us, so we need to show them our support."

Carson said BYU students should support the troops in Iraq by participating in rallies like this because they are out there keeping Americans safe.

"Think of it this way— can you imagine being a soldier fighting out there for a country who doesn't appreciate it," Carson said. "The best thing we can do is hope for the best and support those out there who are doing things for our country."

x hike on movie tickets, pay for renovations

i City officials approved a tax on movie tickets in the estates Theater, opening morial Day at Thanksgivnt.

e city council approved the cket tax on "public assemn March 11, allowing a um tax of $1 per ticket or guest. The new ticket tax for all movie tickets and ation centers.

e city, along with Thanks- Point have invested sever- ion dollars in utility, infra- ure and other public ements to provide service area," said Ed Collins, the city administrator. "The ax has been adopted by the o help assist in some of osts."

estates theaters usually $6 for adults and $4 for ees, children and seniors. However, with the new tax, tickets will rise to $6.50 and $4.50.

Movie ticket prices in other areas also have similar prices.

Wynnsong Cinemas in Provo charge $6.50 for adults and $4.25 for matinees, children and seniors.

Theater	Adults	Matinees, Children, Seniors
Westates Theater	$6.50	$ 4.50
Wynnsong Cinemas	$6.50	$4.25
Cinemark 19	$6.75	$4.25
Movies 8	$1.50	($1 with student IDs)

The ticket prices for Cinemark 19 in the Provo Towne Center are $6.75 for adults and $4.25 for matinees, children and adults.

However, Movies 8 in Provo only charges $1.50. If customers have student IDs, the price is reduced to $1. On Tuesday nights, customers with student IDs pay only 50 cents.

"I'd definitely prefer to go to Movies 8 because it's cheaper," said Cory Davis, 21, a sophomore majoring in business from Boise, Idaho.

The movies played at Movies 8 are ones that have already been played at other full-price ticket theaters.

"I'd rather wait and pay to watch the movie at Movies 8," said Nicole Santiago, 23, a senior majoring in business from Provo. "I don't care to pay full price when I can watch a movie for cheaper."

However, Collins doesn't think the tax will decrease the number of customers who will come to the new cinema.

"I don't think that most people in Utah County will be concerned about a 50-cent increase," he said. "The improvements that have been provided to facilitate the location of the theater have a dramatic positive impact on people's ability to go to a movie and enjoy it."

The tax will help cover expenses for utilities such as road improvements, sewer lines and water.

The theater will feature love-seat rocker tier seating, wall-to-wall screens and state-of-the-art sound and projections systems.

"I think people are excited about the theater," Collins said.

Collins also said there is a lot of interest from other cities, which have asked for copies of the ordinance.

"They may want to adopt it (the ordinance) as well."

Provo City officials said nothing has been passed regarding taxes on movie tickets in Provo theaters. They also said the ticket tax is built into the ticket price.

Tennessee (33-5) closed sh after trailing by 13. ittany Jackson pump l then made a 3-pointer l forward, the lead was 0-66 with 1:01 left.

Jackson's layup drew e to 71-68 with 21 seconds remaining. But Ann Strother, one of two freshman who start for Connecticut, sank two free throws, and freshman Ashley Battle intercepted Tennessee's inbounds pass.

The Huskies moved the ball so quickly that Tennessee could not foul, and fittingly, Taurasi ended up with the ball. She flung it into the stands at the buzzer and Connecticut began yet another victory celebration.

If any more evidence was needed that Connecticut has supplanted Tennessee as the nation's top program in women's hoops, this was it.

The title was the fourth overall for the Huskies, who also beat Tennessee in the 1995 and 2000 championship games and now have beaten the Lady Vols four straight times.

Connecticut denied Tennessee and coach Pat Summitt a seventh title and delivered further insult to a program UConn coach Geno Auriemma had dubbed the "Evil Empire."

Taurasi and Co. made sure it did not strike back.

Strother finished with 17 points, and the other freshman starter, Barbara Turner, came up with 10 points on five tough baskets inside.

Maria Conlon, the spunky 5-foot-9 guard who looks so out of place among the other sleek athletes on the floor, contributed 11 points, six assists and four rebounds for the Huskies.

Those efforts brought another title in what should have been a rebuilding year from last season's 39-0 club.

Instead, the UConn machine just kept grinding out victories and the Huskies became the third repeat champion, following Tennessee (1996-98) and Southern Cal (1983-84).

They finished with six straight victories after their 70-game winning streak was broken by Villanova in the Big East tournament final.

Taurasi was named the Final Four's most outstanding player.

Tennessee, deeper and more experienced, got 18 points from its gritty point guard, Kara Lawson, plus 15 from Gwen Jackson and 13 from Brittany Jackson.

But even that wasn't enough for the Lady Vols on this night. When it was over, Lawson walked slowly to the bench with her head down and stood with her hands on her hips, her career over without a national title.

Connecticut, on the other, might be on a championship roll. The Huskies have no seniors, so everyone is back next season.

Ahead by five at halftime, Connecticut began to take control at the start of the second half, and Taurasi — naturally — was the key.

She started the half with a 3-pointer, Turner scored inside and Conlon hit a 3. Suddenly the lead was up to 11, and not even the thousands of orange-clad fans in the Georgia Dome could urge Tennessee all the way back.

Taurasi converted two three-point plays, one on a picture-perfect backdoor cut, to help keep Connecticut comfortably ahead. Her niftiest basket came when she drove the right baseline and made an off-balance, left-handed shot for a 65-54 lead.

Things certainly were going UConn's way, but Tennessee wasn't finished and made its late run.

If Connecticut's young players were nervous being on this stage, it certainly didn't show. They attacked Tennessee early with near-flawless execution, scoring off screens, getting the ball inside to Turner and Moore and making 3-pointers — six in all in the opening 20 minutes.

But even with all of that, UConn couldn't shake the Lady Vols. Tennessee slowed the Huskies some by going to a zone, crashed the boards relentlessly and got back in it after trailing by seven.

It was tied at 30 when Tennessee's Tye'sha Fluker scored off a strong move on the block. After nearly 19 minutes, they had played to a standstill — until Taurasi got her hands on the ball, that is.

Her 3-pointer from the deep left corner put UConn back ahead — for good, as it turned out — and the Huskies got the ball again when Conlon went down on her knees to take it away.

"I've never been around anyone who is just immune to the pressures of the moment and just lives in the moment and had such joy and passion for the game and shows it on every possession," Auriemma said.

Just before the buzzer sounded, Willnett Crockett threw in a high-arching shot from right in front of the basket for a 35-30 UConn lead.

It was another example of all the things that went right for Connecticut, the national champion again.

Lamb's chalk talk had an effect on a few players.

Freshman midfielder Scott Dean scored, starting a 4-0 run over the quarter's first seven minutes that put the Aggies out of the game.

On defense, Curtis Salmon played solidly throughout the night, deflecting passes, winning ground balls and clearing the ball. Kikumoto continued his brilliant play in the second half, stuffing point-blank shots.

"[Kikumoto and Salmon] really impressed me," Lamb said. "They showed to me they're ready to play at the next level. Mark Stevenson also showed athleticism that says he's ready to contribute."

Utah State managed two goals to end the third quarter, making the score 7-5.

The Cougar defense maintained its solid play in the final quarter though, denying the Aggies any quality shots.

Freshman middie Ryan Frank slashed through the crease and buried a left-handed shot three minutes into the quarter.

Junior attackman David Malan got into the action by finishing a feed on the crease, and with seven seconds left in the game he beat his defender and scored his second goal of the night.

Just for kicks: Men's, women's soccer teams hit field for spring training

Men preparing for life as professional soccer players

By MATT HARGREAVES

Though many people are focusing on July 24 to celebrate the historic journey of the pioneers, the BYU men's soccer team is focusing on a new pioneer trek – that of playing in a professional league.

This move from a club program to a professional one is the first of its kind among university-sponsored teams.

The team has purchased a Premier Development League franchise and will start playing in May 2003.

BYU will be part of the PDL Southwest division against teams like the Fresno Fuego, Nevada Wonders (from Carson City), Orange County Blue Stars and the Southern California Seahorses (La Mirada).

For students who will still crave that inter-Utah rivalry, the team will also play the Utah Blitzz (yes, another team with "zz") three times this year. The Blitzz were the D-3 2001 champions.

Students may wonder why the team is switching to a different league, leaving its college days behind, as well as its seven Collegiate Club National championships since 1993.

BYU coaches are hoping that the increase in competition will lead to more LDS players wanting to come to BYU so they can take their skills to the next level.

"At the club level, it was just too easy," head coach Chris Watkins said. "All athletes at this level want to see how good they can be; whether that is on the national team, Major League Soccer or in these professional leagues. They all deserve that chance, and that's what this league will let us do."

Coaches are also hoping that the increased competition, as well as a different season that won't make the team battle with the football and women's volleyball games for fans, will result in a 40-percent increase in attendance.

By not promoting the team to Division I of the NCAA, which it was in 1987, BYU will be able to improve the quality of its team by playing the equivalent of all-star teams, while saving the $500,000 dollars required by the NCAA.

However, there may be problems waiting for the soccer team besides the increased competition.

According to an article in the New York Times, Marcia Greenberger, co-president of the National Women's Law Center, is concerned that this change of competition simply reflects a new way of avoiding conflicts with Title IX.

"The point of the law is to require schools to give equal opportunity, not to allow them to use all kinds of tricks and evasions to undermine their obligations to be evenhanded and fair," Greenberger said.

Beyond the teams involved in the PDL's Southwest division, BYU will also play two games against premier teams of Mexico.

The Cougars will play Mexico's elite under-23 team on May 3 and Pachuca on July 23 in Provo.

The games will also be broadcast via KBYU, Telemundo TV and Radio Unica throughout the summer.

With all the anticipation and the expectations put on the team after making this jump, Watkins said he wants to keep things in perspective and make modest gains every year.

"We hope to win more than we lose; that would be a really great thing for us this year," Watkins said. "A couple years from now, then we'll start talking about championships, but I think that's just a little unrealistic today."

BYU begins its season April 25 with two games in Monterrey, Mexico, against Mexican professional teams Tigres and Monterrey.

The team opens play at home against Nevada on May 2. BYU will have eleven home games during the season, which will run through August, wrapping up with the PDL Championships on Aug. 2-9.

Women end spring season on Frido

By HILLARY WALLACE

Because the NCAA allows only five days of competition in the spring season, the BYU women's soccer team packs its schedule with the toughest opponents it can find.

"We try and play as many games as we physically can," coach Jen Rockwood said. "We also see more player development in the spring than we do in the fall."

After losing its only senior, Jeni Viernes, BYU is using this season as a chance for younger players to increase playing time and to prepare as a team for the fall.

The Cougars opened training for the spring season in January with weight lifting and fitness, while playing on the field without the coaches.

February followed with skill and technical development, as the coaches made defensive changes and worked to develop individual players in preparation for the first game.

"Our focus is work rate," Rockwood said. "Everyone is dedicated to working hard on the field. There is not as much pressure, so the players tend to play harder and gain more confidence."

Here is a brief overview of the team's results so far:

Tucson

BYU played its first game of the 2003 spring season Feb. 14 against the University of Arizona, with junior Lydia Ojuka scoring three goals and leading the Cougars to a 5-1 victory.

The Wildcats struck first after a scramble in front of the goal, but BYU quickly countered with a goal by sophomore Krissa Campbell.

Ojuka scored on a go-ahead goal with assists from All-American Aleisha Rose and Campbell as BYU controlled the rest of the game. Rose finished with three assists.

"Aleisha has always been a quiet leader but is becoming more vocal this season," Rockwood said. "She has the respect from the team because of her work rate and attitude."

Junior Terra Bigelow scored an additional goal and freshman goalkeepers Natalie Evans and Meredith Simmons saw their first game minutes in a Cougar uniform.

"With some new faces in the lineup, we did a tremendous job against a very fast and athletic Arizona team," Rockwood said after the game.

Las Vegas

BYU traveled to Vegas March. 8 in its second day of spring competition and managed to win two of the three games, bringing its spring-season record to 4-1.

The Cougars faced Northern Arizona, UNLV and Utah in one day, playing each team in a 45-minute game.

BYU defeated Northern Arizona in its first game, 2-1. The team's first goal came with defender Charlene Lui finding forward Jennifer Fielding in position to score.

The Cougars defeated UNLV 2-0 in the second game of the day, with the first goal by freshman Jaime Rendich.

Brooke Thulin scored her first goal as a Cougar by following up after Brooke Bowman's header was deflected in front of the goal.

The last match of the day matched the Cougars against the University of Utah. Krissa Campbell scored early in the game, but BYU was unable to hold the lead as the Utes scored two goals late in the game to solidify the win.

Portland

BYU traveled to play at Nike's World Headquarters April 4-5 for its next two days of spring-season competition, playing on one of the fields at the Nike Campus.

Teams participating in the tournament are mostly Pac 10 schools, including the University of Portland, which was the 2002 National Champion, as well as Oregon. Washington, Ore State and Washington Sta

BYU faced Portland A cold and rainy weather, s gling in the first half and short 4-1.

Portland scored three early, but Rockwood said Cougars played much bet second half, giving up onl shot attempts. Lydia Ojuk scored BYU's only goal fo game.

In the second game of tournament, the Cougars ed the University of Orego Freshman Jenavieve Phill scored her first goal as a and Ojuka scored BYU's goal on a breakaway.

Freshman Davia King the last goal, and freshma ley Smith had a great perfo ance as the goalkeeper.

"It was not one of our showings," Rockwood said tournament overall. "But some good experience."

BYU junior pitcher Paul Jacinto has become a dominant starting pitcher in the Cougars' rotation after starting the season as a reliever. Jacinto has a 4-4 record on the season and an ERA of 4.30.

working hard enough to achieve the potential.

Jacinto saw the situation differently.

"I felt he wasn't giving me a chance and an opportunity to show my talent," Jacinto said. "I was written off as a pitcher from the old program. He wasn't giving me the time I needed to develop, coming back from a two-year mission."

Once the two knew where the other was coming from, Jacinto said they got along great. As a result, Jacinto was able to get into the starting rotation last year.

After starting this season in the bullpen for the first two series, Jacinto received his chance to enter the starting rotation. Junior Michel Bergeron went down with an arm injury, and Jacinto replaced him in the rotation.

In his first start on Feb. 15, Jacinto pitched a complete-game three hitter against Northwestern, but lost the game 1-0.

After poor run support led to an 0-4 start, Jacinto has won four straight.

Last year, Jacinto threw three different pitches: a fastball, a curveball and a changeup. During the off-season, despite coaches telling him his curveball was good enough, Jacinto developed a fourth pitch, a slider

"He had a decent curveball, but he didn't have great command of it," Law said. "Sometimes he'd throw it for a strike; sometimes he wouldn't.

"With the slider, he has really good command of it. He can throw that pitch for a strike all the time, just like his fastball. That gives him two pitches that he has very good command of in the strike zone. When you have command of two very solid pitches, you give yourself a pretty good chance to win."

The slider was his dad's idea, but Jacinto developed it on his own. In a short time, the slider has become one of Jacinto's best and most-used pitches.

"Because he's got great control of his slider, he'll throw that at any count," said sophomore catcher Casey Cloward. "That's made him very successful. Because he's got that fourth pitch, it keeps the hitters guessing and guessing."

Cloward has played catcher in many of Jacinto's games during the year. He said Jacinto is one of the most enjoyable pitchers he's ever caught for because of his confidence level.

"He knows he's good," Cloward said. "He knows he's better than the batter. A lot of times I think pitchers go out and do the motions. Yea, they have good technique, but they don't have it mentally.

> "Paul just knows he's going to throw his fastball right by them, or he's going to throw his slider and they're going to swing right through it. They can't hit him. He's got that mentality."
> Casey Cloward
> BYU catcher

"Paul just knows he's going to throw his fastball right by them, or he's going to throw his slider and they're going to swing through it. They can't hit him. He's got that mentality."

In a recent start against San Diego State last Friday, Jacinto coasted through the Aztec lineup until he reached the fourth inning. He gave up three runs in the fourth inning before settling down once again.

Trouble in the middle innings is a common occurrence for Jacinto this year.

"I get into a groove early in the game," Jacinto said. "I get really comfortable. After a couple innings, I start to lose concentration because I'm in such a groove. That usually wakes me up and gets me back focused on what I need to do."

A sign of a good pitcher is his ability to bounce back after bad innings. Several times this year, including the game against San Diego, Jacinto rebounded from bad innings and finished the game strong.

"I think that the one thing I've noticed with Paul this year over last year is his ability to compete when he doesn't have his best stuff," Law said. "Nowhere was it more apparent then the cold night that he pitched in Utah where it took him two innings before his arm loosened up. If that would have been Paul last year, I think he would have been out of the ballgame. I don't think he would have battled through that."

Through the first two months in the season, Jacinto is 4-4 with a 4.30 ERA and 48 strikeouts. Opposing batters are hitting a conference-low .232 against him. Twice in BYU losing efforts, opponents scored two runs or less off Jacinto.

Jacinto was named the Mountain West Conference Pitcher of the Week after throwing a one-hit complete game against No. 24 UNLV on March 21. He probably would have been named the national pitcher of the week if another pitcher hadn't pitched a no-hitter the same week.

This year is the first time that Jacinto has had the same teachings and the same trainings from the same coaches as the previous year.

"I've been able to work on the same things, and I'm going to do what I can," Jacinto said. "I've always had that attitude."

Women's tennis plays one more match

Cougars add extra home match before road trip

By CELESTE WILCOX

Really, this is the last one.

The BYU women's tennis team thought it was done with home matches for the season, but it was wrong.

Idaho State University is in Utah this week to play Weber State, and BYU head coach Craig Manning took advantage of the opportunity for extra play and scheduled a match.

BYU faces off against the Bengals at 3 p.m. today at the SFH outdoor tennis courts.

Manning said he scheduled the match to help BYU improve.

"We're always trying to get better," he said.

BYU is 8-10 this season, and 3-2 in the Mountain West Conference.

ISU is 9-4 on the season, and this is a non-conference match for the Cougars. This is the only break the Cougars have from conference teams in their last six matches of the season.

Senior Tara Porter was sick and didn't play in BYU's matches last weekend against San Diego State and UNLV. Manning said she is still ill and he is waiting to see if she will be well enough to play in any of the remaining matches.

"We're hoping she'll be back and playing by conference," Manning said.

Filling the gap is Nicole Schneider, who earned two singles victories for the Cougars last weekend against San Diego State and UNLV.

"We're excited Nicole is back," Manning said. "She's been playing really well."

Freshman Hanni Whittenbecker will also be playing today against ISU. This will be her first official match at BYU.

Manning said Whittenbecker will be a valuable asset to the team, and he is excited for her to play tomorrow.

Following today's match, BYU will be on the road this weekend to take on Wyoming and Colorado State.

Cougars preparing for top-ranked Pepperdine

BYU head coach emphasizing passing in preparation

By STEPHEN VINCENT

With an extra week to prepare for its biggest matches of the 2003 season, the BYU men's volleyball team has focused its efforts on passing.

When the Cougars face top-ranked Pepperdine on Friday and Saturday in Malibu, Calif., they will have to contend with an experienced and tall Pepperdine front line.

The Waves' outside hitters, 6-foot-9 Sean Rooney and 6-foot-5 Fred Winters, and 6-foot-8 middle blocker Brad Keenan have created the best blocking team in the country.

Rooney and Winters are two of the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation's best hitters, and the three players also rank in the top 10 in the MPSF in aces.

BYU coach Tom Peterson said his team is trying to counter Pepperdine's strength in those three areas by working on its passing, serving and serve receiving.

In circumventing the block, Peterson said he is worried about his team's first pass. And to do that, the Cougars need to solidly receive the Waves' serve.

"If we pass it (the first pass) up toward the net, (setter) Carlos (Moreno) can have options," Peterson said. "He can choose to set the middles or the outsides. And if we can do that consistently, it will be a big key."

Lacking the superstar hitters that BYU has had in recent years, the Cougars have varied their offense.

Junior opposite side hitter Jonathan Alleman and senior outside hitter Rafael Paal are the players that most frequently receive Moreno's passes.

But Moreno also has viable options in middle blockers Michael Burke and Chris Gorny and outside hitters Luka Slabe and Jaime Mayol.

The Cougar hitters have taken turns leading the team in hitting.

That has given BYU an element of surprise in its offense, which Peterson said is one of the keys to his team's success.

In contrast, Pepperdine's offense is predictable: the Waves will set Rooney (4.53 kills per game) and Winters (4.38), who are fifth and sixth, respectively, in the MPSF in kills per game.

Because of Winters and Rooney's prowess in hitting the ball, Peterson said his team will need to prevent the pair from getting the ball.

The best way to do that is to serve well because it disrupts a team's passing.

The Cougars need to win both matches to tie the Waves for the MPSF championship and earn the right to host the MPSF tournament.

BYU will play a first-round game in the Smith Fieldhouse on April 19 against a yet-to-be determined opponent.

If the Cougars are able to advance past the first round, they will participate in the MPSF semifinals on April 24. The MPSF final game will be on April 26.

Utah crickets hatch early

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon crickets are hatching three weeks earlier than normal and could leave 6 million acres of land in Utah infested — more than double last year's plague.

State agriculture officials planned Wednesday to set the year's first poison bait — toxic wheat flakes — in Millard County, a hotspot for crickets.

"Their populations swing and decline and we're in a cycle of populations growing uncontrollably. The last five years, their numbers have doubled each year," said Larry Lewis, spokesman for the Utah Department of Agriculture and Food.

The infestation spread from 23,000 acres eight years ago to 2.45 million acres last year — the worst in recorded history for Utah.

Weber Basin restricts water

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Water-use restrictions are planned in the Weber Basin again this year.

While reservoir storage is no worse than it was at this time a year ago, there is less snow for the spring runoff and less of that is making it into streams, rather than soaking into the ground.

Only one small reservoir in the Weber system, at Smith & Morehouse, will fill. Total storage in Weber Basin reservoirs is not expected to get higher than 55 percent, said Tage Flint, director of the Weber Basin Water conservancy District, which supplies water to more than 30 cities and hundreds of agricultural users in the Top of Utah.

The water restrictions mean 20 percent less water for agricultural users and lawn-watering restrictions, such as no watering between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

Saved energy lessens taxes

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Energy conservation has helped the Northwest save enough power in the last 20 years to light two cities the size of Seattle, plus a town the size of Helena, Mont.

The potential for future savings remains large, starting with inefficient washing machines that cost the average ratepayers a good chunk of their monthly electric bill, the report said.

"It's certainly one of the single biggest remaining potential savings for residential power," said Tom Eckman, conservation resources manager for the Northwest Power Planning Council.

The council's four-state region of Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Washington saved the equivalent of 2,600 megawatts of power since Congress passed the Northwest Power Act in 1980.

GM unplugs electric cars

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The celebrated ride of the car that spawned the nation's toughest emissions regulation ends at a parking lot in Southern California, where a growing fleet of General Motors electric cars awaits an uncertain fate.

Dozens of the green, metallic blue and bright red futuristic autos are lined up behind a chain-link fence at the edge of a freight rail line in Van Nuys, a sure sign the world's largest automaker has pulled the plug on a vehicle it heralded as recently as two years ago as "the car of the future."

As California retreats from its strict pollution regulation, GM is taking the cars off the road when leases expire.

Trial begins in suit against Tommy Lee child drowning

Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Rock musician Tommy Lee, 40, testified Tuesday at the start of a civil trial over the drowning of a 4-year-old boy in his pool, saying all the children at his son's birthday party came with adults who should have been watching them.

"If they were alone it would be my problem. They weren't," said the former drummer for the band Motley Crue. He added that he kept an eye on his own two children at all times during the June 16, 2001, party during which Daniel Karven-Veres drowned.

Daniel's parents, actress Ursula Karven and TV producer James Veres, are seeking unspecified damages in a wrongful-death lawsuit against Lee.

Attorney Thomas Girardi, who represents Daniel's parents, said in his opening statement that his clients had been unaware that their child would be swimming. There was one life jacket, and Lee gave it to his own son, Brandon, Girardi said.

Tommy Lee
Rock musician

Girardi said Lee planned the party at his Malibu home at the last minute because his estranged wife, actress Pamela Anderson, had a party for Brandon the week before.

"Mr. Lee decided to throw a party, too," Girardi said. "But this was a party for his pals. The pictures show guys with tattoos."

Lee's attorney James Baratta countered that the party was carefully planned, that Lee arranged for a magician, a petting zoo and a Buzz Lightyear character to entertain the 15 to 20 children.

"This was not a drinking party. ... This wasn't a Hollywood party. This was a children's party. Mr. Lee invited people who had children," Baratta said.

Girardi said Daniel's parents sent him to the party with a male caretaker, an exchange student from Germany. The tragedy occurred after the caretaker decided to leave the party and entrusted Daniel to another family's nanny, both lawyers said.

The German caregiver has disappeared and will not be a witness, they said.

Livestock farmers turn to feds for help

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Millions of pounds of dry milk will be hauled from storage caves and warehouses to 24,000 farmers in drought-ravaged states to feed their cattle, buffalo, sheep and goats.

Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman said Tuesday that 218 million pounds of the government's surplus powdered milk — enough to make 4.5 billion 8-ounce glasses — will help farmers in the Plains and Western states as they prepare for what is forecast to be another very dry spring and summer.

"One of our most pressing concerns right now is the ability of pasture and grazing lands to support livestock herds," Veneman said. "These herds are crucial to the livelihoods of many rural families, and they are the backbone of the economy in many rural communities."

Farmers in nine states [illegible] Arizona to Montana will [illegible] protein-packed dry milk to [illegible] grain for their livestock.

Snowpack, reservoir numbers show West in for long, dry summer

Recent snow storms fail to save regions faltering water supplies

Associated Press

Dan Knisley took his four boys by the hand and led them to the edge of Rye Patch Reservoir, where they knelt together. The sons took their cue from their father, bowed their heads and prayed for that most elusive commodity in tiny Lovelock, Nev., and much of the West — rain.

"The Bible says if God's people would humble themselves and pray, he would heal their land," said Knisley, a farmer.

But prayer can only do so much when the Western drought, now in its fourth year, is so bad. Lovelock gets its water from the lower Humboldt River in northern Nevada, but the river is only 25 percent of average, meaning farmers' income will be virtually nothing this summer. The reservoir is nearly empty.

Across the West, the news is much the same: Westerners are in for a long, dry summer with little relief from drought. The April 1 snowpack report — critical because it's typically the last major survey of the season — was grim.

While the Rocky Mountains, from Montana to northern New Mexico, improved during March, with snowpacks near or just above average in many basins, snowpacks in parts of Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Arizona were less than 50 percent of average.

"It's bad, really bad," said Randy Julander, snow survey supervisor for the Natural Resources Conservation Service in Salt Lake City. "We have very poor reservoir storage because we've used a ton of it over the past five years. It makes for a pretty bleak water supply."

Storms dumped heavy rain and snow on Colorado last month, and the state, along with parts of Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, has average to above average snowpacks, with a few spots approaching 50 percent above average. But that likely will not make much difference as summer approaches.

> "The Bible says if God's people would humble themselves and pray, he would heal their land."
> Dan Knisley
> Nevada farmer

"It's only maybe 5, 10 percent of the West that we have that type of snowpack," said Phil Pasteris, supervisory physical scientist with the NRCS in Portland, Ore. "The catch is that area was very dry last year, so there's a chance you won't get as much runoff because of the dry soil."

Reservoir storage isn't much better than the snowpack. Four states — California, Idaho, Montana and Washington _ are near average, but storage in the rest of the West is well below normal, according to a NRCS report issued Tuesday.

"There's probably not a Western state that is sitting real pretty," said Kelly Redmond, regional climatologist for the Western Regional Climate Center in Reno, Nev. "Nobody is going into the summer season with a real fat supply in their reservoirs."

In Oregon, snowpack is 55 percent of average despite getting a lot of snow during March. Reservoirs in the state are only 66 percent of average.

"There's going to be shortages for irrigation water, shortages for feeding livestock," said Stan Fox, snow hydrologist for the NRCS in Portland. "Springs could dry up or dry up earlier than usual."

Last year at this time, the state's snowpack was 132 percent of average.

"Full recovery is going to take almost like a biblical event to happen," Pasteris said.

It's not just the water supply that will be hurting. Trees devastated by drought will have a harder time fending off insects, leading to more dead timber that will increase the fire danger.

Orem man deals with disease

BY PHIL ELLINGSON

isfigurement, blindness, ness, skeletal abnormalities, and spinal tumors, loss of s — are just a few of the otoms that may be in the e for Joel Anderson.

nderson, 42, an Orem resi- has been living with neu- romatosis, or Von Reckling- en's disease, all of his life.

he disease is less well known other neurological diseases as muscular dystrophy, yet ects more people in America. ccording to the National tute of Health's Web page, it rts more than 100,000 people he United States alone, and st 2 million people worldoel, as he prefers to be called, s quite candidly about the dis- s that has left him crippled for under a year. He and his Cindy, are open about the le situation that lead up to almost losing his right leg.

f don't need to worry about 't's going to happen because I w what will happen will be for best," Joel said.

he story of Joel's disease ts at the beginning of his life. n Joel was born, he had a ed and broken right tibia. tors tried numerous bone ts, including bone used from g. None of these worked l, one day, in a desperate plea, 's mother prayed for a mira-she received it. A final bone t from Joel's hip was used to his tibia to his fibula. This ed stabilize the affected leg e could live a normal life, at at as normal as he could being body cast until the age of 4.

he doctors realized that Joel a disease called neurofibro- tosis. This disease is often rred to as the "Elephant n" disease because it was ginally thought that John rrick, the elephant man, had Joel has a much less severe m of the disease, however. ough it can cause extreme dis- uration in the body and face, only has pea-sized tumors ttered across his body.

their body, each at least one centimeter or larger," Joel said.

The spots are a darkening of the pigmentation spread periodically over the body.

Though Joel has lived with the disease his whole life, he hadn't had any problems since his childhood. But in May of 2002, something happened to his right leg.

"I was just sitting down at work. It was just before 7, and I heard it snap, and I felt it snap. I thought I just popped my ankle. It didn't hurt at all. Five hours later, my toes started going numb," he said.

After seeing multiple doctors, Joel finally met with a specialist from the Huntsman Institute. The doctor gave him an ultimatum. He could have his leg amputated just below the knee, or he could have a metal plate and bone graft. The graft only had about a 60 percent chance of success.

After the surgery, the father of two young daughters emerged with his leg still intact, but two inches shorter. The doctor had to remove the bad part of the bone and compact it in with a piece of Joel's hip bone.

Though the operation was a success, the battle for Joel's leg is not over. He still has to go back to the Huntsman Institute to have his cast removed.

"There's still a good chance I could lose it (the leg). It all depends on what happens April 21," he said.

Through all of Joel's struggles, his wife has been at his side the entire way.

When asked how she has been able to cope with things, Cindy said, "We've really been watched over and blessed."

Though she's been supportive, she said it has been stressful with the family only having minimal insurance. The family only had PCN insurance, which only covered the basic of health problems, not the extreme problems Joel was having.

Throughout it all, the Andersons have relied on each other and on their faith to help them get through their trials.

In his typically calm way Joel said, "I've just had a feeling of don't worry about it, everything will be OK. The Lord's gotten us through every step of the way, and he'll continue to help us."

PEED

rem debates ising speed limits

ed limits posted appropriately the 85 percentile speed have er accidents than those with ed limits incorrectly posted ve or below what the majority vel.

A national Uniform Traffic trol Devices manual recom- nds the 85 percentile speed be the established posted speed limit on a particular street to the nearest five mph increment. For example, if 38 mph is the 85 percentile speed limit, then the national guidelines show the speed limit can be 40 mph. Orem engineers recommend the speed limit should actually be rounded down to 35 mph, Tschirki said.

Orem public safety and engineering departments have looked over all of the studies and results. The recommendations given are coming in below the 85 percentile speed that is actually recommended nationally, Tschirki said.

"We are trying to bring it within the national guidelines and recommendations that are established for the entire country that have been around for many years," he said.

Increasing the posted speed limit will also increase the efficiency and flow of traffic on those streets, he said.

Some Orem residents have a different opinion about raising the speed limits.

Orem resident, Carol Walker, said, "People drive that fast anyway. If the speed limit was raised, I would bet that they would go faster because people think that they can drive five miles faster over the speed limit."
